DISTILLERY.

Edinburgh, May 13. 1785.

THIS day being appointed for the Committees of the different counties, and the Diffillers to take under their confideration, a petition to Parliament, to alter or amend the Diffillery Laws in Scotland, the Meeting being thin, did not think proper to enter into a difcuffion of this very important business. Therefore, adjourned till Wednesslay first the 18th current, and then to meet in the Exchange Cossenberg, at twelve o'clock, when it is intreated that the Committees from the different examines, and the Diffillers, with effect, in order to prepare a petition as Parliament, for a remelal of the giverances attending the present function of the Distillery Laws. And those concerned will be pleased to consider, that from the advanced period of this Sessions of Parliament, that unless an immediate application is made, no alteration can be expected; which, if delayed till next sessions, must be attended with fatal consequences to the Landed Interest, and the middling class of Distillers in Scotland.

By order of the Meeting,

JAMES MILLAR, Clerk.

THE Justices of the Peace, Commissioners of Haddington, May 12. 1785.

THE Justices of the Peace, Commissioners of Supply, and Freeholders of the county of East Lothian, having taken the Irish Resolutions into their serious consideration,

RESOLVED,

1mo, That a commercial treaty betwist Great Britain and Ireland, founded upon a reasonable and just communication of benefits and burdens, will be highly advantageous to both nations.

2do, That the Landed Gentlemen of this county, not connected with trade, have not at present the experience; nor the means of information, sufficient to enable them to decide competently whether the present proposed treaty will lead to that great object or not; and therefore they leave this matter to the wisdom of the Parliaments of both nations, trusting, with persect considence, that they will act in such a manner as will tend to promote the true and substantial interest of the empire at large 3tio, The Meeting, at the same time, are so opinion, That a business in itself so complicated, and so highly interesting and important in its consequences to both nations, and which must be perpetual, ought not to be precipitated to a conclusion; and which must be perpetual, ought not to be precipitated to a conclusion; and that it may be decessary to delay the final adjustment of this business till the next session of Parliament, in order thereby to give leisure to well-surformed, upright, and dispassionate the final adjustment of this business till the next tenion of ranameter, in order thereby to give leiture to well-informed, purght, and dispatisonate men, to come forward with honest and useful information. And, 410, That copies of these Resolutions be transmitted to their Representatives in Parliament; and that the same be published in the Edinburgh news-papers. (Signed)

THE BUDGET.

THE order of the day being read for going into a Committee of the whole House on ways and means,

Mr Chancellor Piet rofe to open the budget of the year. He faid he would not trouble the House with a long exordium on the necessity there was of providing for the exigencies of the year. He was persuaded there was but one opinion on that head. He said it was painful to think, that at the restoration of prace there should be occasion to load the public with new burdens, yet he confided in the spirit, the zeal, and the patrioffin of the country, to acknowledge and acquiefce in the neceffity of preferving the credit of the nation, in making good the expences of a ruinous and an unprofitable war. It was a disagreeable, yet a necessary task, which his situation imposed on him, and he consided in the cardour of the House, while he stated what appeared to him the best resources that were now left to us.

The two great branches we were to provide for were.

zil, The current fervices of the year. And, zil, The unfunded debt of the nation.

For the first there were already voted for the service of the

Eighteen thousand men, L. 936,000 Ordinary of the navy, . Extraordinaries of the navy, 675,307

The fecond general head was for the fervice of the army, for which the fum of 2,286,263 l. had been voted.

The third general head was the expences of the Ordnance, for defraying of which the fum of 392,855 l. had been voted. The deficiencies he stated to be 1,612,908 l. And the mifcellaneous fervices amounted to 3,359,836 l. making in the whole nearly the fum of L. 9,747,300

He would now state the ways and means we had for the payment of this fum. There had been already

The malt duty, 750,000 The land tax, 2,000,000 Exchequer bills 2,500,000 Sinking fund, 702,539 Army favings, 231,578

2,563,122 There would therefore remain to be provided for, the fum

a This furn, small as it was, he hoped would be the last which he, hould have occasion to call on the nation to make good. He had not thought it accessary to make any direct loan, and had therefore applied to the Bank of England to advance one million, to be paid by Exchequer bills. By this transaction, he faid, the Public would fave something, for the interest would not amount to more than 4 l. 11 s. per cent. as the money would not be wanted immediately. He would, however, eftimate the interest of the whole at 50,000 1.

He would now call the attention of the House to a more important confideration, namely, the provision for paying the unfunded debt of the nation. He said, the amount of the whole unfunded navy debt, principal and interest, to the 31st December 128 18 L. 9,505,808 of December 1784, was Ordnance debentures to the fame period, of December 1784, was to Fruch Great as this fum was, and heavy as the burdens must be on the nation to extinguish it, yet he was not for delaying the liquidation of it beyond the prefent fession. It was a load on the credit of the nation, which every man must wish to see removed. The greatest part of this debt consisted in Navy Bills, of which fix millions had been funded, and taxes provided for last year; there therefore remained something more than four millions now to be provided for. It had, he faid, been the re-ceived opinion, that those Navy bills which had been issued two years, were entitled to be paid at par. He would therefore propose to the Committee, that some encouragement should be held out to the bill-holders, in order to bring them out of the market: at the same time, to leave it optional to them to wait till the two years were expired.

He had endeavoured to learn the fentiments of the bill-holders on this subject, and he believed they were not averse to allowing a small discount to the Public on funding. This discount, he thought, could not be left than one quarter per cent-per month. He would not detain the Committee by any repetition of the arguments he had priged laft year in funding this debt, why he thought the 5 per cents more eligible to the Public than a nominal lower fund. The annual faving would be at least 30,000 L and this was surely an object. The 5 per cents had, within these few days, been estimated at from 92 1-half tor 92. 1-4th; but then there was half a year's dividend nearly due on them. On this account, about 4 3-4ths ought to be deducted; the fair price therefore would be for the Exchange 90 3-4than. As it was, however, reasonable to suppose that the large fum to be brought into the market would occafion fome little temporary depression in this stock; therefore it had been fuggetted to him as fair and equitable, that fome allowance ought to be made on this account, particularly as the flock was, at this time, including the half-year's dividend, fo low as 91 3-4ths. He would therefore fubmit to the Committee, that it did not appeal unreasonable to make an allowance of one per cent, for the reason he had mentioned; and he had agreed, that it should be valued at 89 3-4ths. 111 l. 8 s. nominal flock would therefore be the amount of every 100 l. binded of the part debt. funded of the navy debt—
The whole interest of which will amount to

To which add the interest of the million to be borrowed from the Bank, 50,000

40,000

And the probable amount of the fulfian tax, which had been repealed, and which now remained to be provided for,

Total interest to be raised,

He was now come to the most painful task he had to go through, namely, the proposing taxes for the payment of his sum, which, though not considerable, yet, by those who were already so deeply loaded, he was senable it must be selt. He had, however, endeavoured to the payment of the selection. had, however, endeavoured to feer clear of very tax that would oppress the poor; and he hoped that in this he should meet with the hearty support of the House, though they were likely to feel the burden the heavier.

ADDITIONAL TAX ON MALE SERVENTS. The first object of taxation which had prefented itself to him as being a priper one, was to increase the tax on men servants, in proportion as they became subservient to luxury or vanity. He would therefore propole, that in future there should be paid for every male fervant an annual tax of 11. 5 s. the tax to increase in the following proportion; from two to five, 1 l. 10s. from five to feven, 1 L 15 s. from eight to ten, 21. and for eleven fervanes, and all above, 31 each. The additional produce of this tax, including a tax upon waiters at taverns, inns, and coffeehoules, he would elimine at 35,000 l.

FERNALE SERVANTS. The next was he had to propose was one which had been often the subject of conversation, though not of serious discution; she meant the officus and unpopular tax on maid servants. This he was affinost certain would be a very productive tax, and he believed it would not be much felt, as he only meant to make the tax on each two shillings and fixpence to those who keep but one fervant; for two he proposed five shillings; and for three semale servants, and all above, ten shillings, to be paid for each. It was not, he faid, a very eafy matter to calculate the produce of this tax, as he had no certain data to go upon, as he had on the former; all he had, was to endeavour to make fome calculation from the number of houses, and from this he was led to think, that the tax on maid fervants would produce no less a fum than 143,000 !.

RETAIL SHOPS. The next subject of his proposed taxes was one which he could have withed to have avoided, as he would every tak which is paid in hard money, and not imperceptibly. The former is always uppopular while the latter is paid without re-luctance. The tax he meant was a tax on retail thops, which he would endeayout to modify in fuch a manner as not to di-ftrefs the lower class; but to make the butthen equal on the more opulent trader, he would propose that in should increase according to the renr, which commonly bears some proportion to the profit of the traffic carried on. He would therefore propose a tax of 1 s. in the pound for the lower fort, that rent from 4 l. to 10 l. from 10 l. to 15 l. one shilling and threepence per pound, and from 15 l. to 25 l. one shilling and fixpence, adding to all above three pence for every five pounds of rent paid. As this was a new tax, he had been at tome pains to learn what might be the probable returns of it, and he had procured information fufficient for him to form fome notion of t. He believed the cities of London and Westminster, with the berough of Southwark, would produce 60,000 l. of this tax; and from the returns which he had received from other towns and cities in the kingdom, with the probable calculations he had made of the number of thopse in smaller towns and villages, he had estimated the whole would produce 144,000 1. As it was impossed the however to judge of this with precision, he would take the whole at 120,000 l. The sum was so considerable as to make it an object; and hedid not think, from the proportions he had observed, that it would be oppressive. In order, however, to make it as palatable as poslible, he meant to abolish the licences annually given to hawkers and pedlars, which were injurious to the fair trader, by opening a door for finuggling. He observed, that this tax would not cost the nation any thing, as he intended it should be collected with the house tax. These he stated to be the most productive of the taxes he had to propose. POST HORSES.

The next article of his intended taxes, was a small addition to the post-horse tax; a tax which he said was not intended to affect the traveller, but ought to be paid by the person who hires the horfes; and as he now charges 12 d. instead of 1rd. per mile, he conceived therefore it would not be improper on this account to put an additional halfpenny per mile on every horfe. This tax he estimated at 50,000 1.

GLQVES. The next object of taxation, he faid, was not fo direct as the former, but as it was an article of very general confumption, he had not a doubt but it would be productive; he meant a tax on gloves. The idea, he believed, was not new; it had been formerly thought of, but had been abandoned, from an idea that it could not easily be collected. It was his opinion that it might be collected in the fame way as the tax on hats, by a stamp. It was intended also that it should be paid only by the retail trader-and as it was a tax on a luxury, it could not be faid to affect the poor. As to what fum this tax would produce, it was impossible to form any accurate idea; but if there were three millions in the kingdom who wore gloves, and he believed there were, it would not be unreasonable to suppose that nine millions of pairs of gloves were annually u. There were, he believed, fome gloves that were fold for less than four-pence, he did not intend these should pay any thing -all above he would propoteto tax in the following manner: Every pair of gloves of the value of 4 d. and not exceeding 10 d. to pay a duty of 1 d.

From 10 d. to 16 d. to pay 2 d. and all above 16 d. to pay a duty of 3 d. It would not be too much, he believed, to average this at three-halfpence a pair, and this would produce a fum of 55,500 l. He would, however, take it at 50,000 l.

PAWNBRÖKERS.

The next tax he would propose to the Committee, was upon a body of men, who, he believed, were very able to pay it, namely, pawnbrokers. He had not been able to get exact information how many persons were liable to pay this tax, but he was of opinion that 10 l. ought to be id by every pawnbroker in London, and 51. by every other. This, he calculated, would produce 15,000 l.

SALT. The last article which he proposed to the consideration of the Committee was not properly a tax, but an alteration in the re-venue collected for falt, which had been much abused. It had been usual, he faid, to make an allowance for waste in falt carried coastwife. This allowance, he was informed, was much more than ought to be made, being three buffiels and a half out of every forty bufhels. He would therefore propose, that this allowance be refricted to one bushel and a half. This, he faid, would produce 12,000 l. He would now briefly recapitulate the whole: Male fervants, L. 35,000 140,000 Pemale fervants, Pemale ic... Retail shops, 120,000 $0,000 Gloves, 1284 051 50,000 Pawnbrokers, 15,000 WAT MIT Salt, 12,000

Amounting in all to the fum of 422,000 Thefe, he faid, were the feveral articles of taxation to which he had turned his mind, and which he fubmitted to the wifdom of Parliament,

Mr Fox faid, that though he had no objection to the taxes now proposed by the Right Hon. Gentleman, he could not however help making a few observations on them. With re-spect to the fustion-tax, there was, he thought, much impropricty in calculating it at the fum of 40,000 l. and it would be much better to estimate the whole, than make such a partial comparison by alluding to the deficiency on it. With regard to the tax on men fervants, he approved of it, as in no manner whatever detrimental to the public interest, every person affected by it being fully adequate to the discharge of the sum specified; it also affected only a species of luxury, which had been always considered as a fix object of taxation. But there was a great deficiency in the produce at former periods; he was of opinion, therefore, that some regulation should be made previous to any augmentation; because if Government proceeded merely on hypothesis, without some degree of certainty as to the produce, it was proceeding on very fallacious grounds. As to the tax on female fervants, he did not mean to oppose it, as the exigency of the times required it, but would have been much better pleased to see another substituted in its stead, that would produce a fum equal to that at which the prefent was estimated. He observed, that it would be particularly heavy on families, which from the number of their children are obliged to keep feveral women fervants; it therefore appeared to him, and he doubted not but the Right Hon. Gentleman himfelf would on reflection confider it as a very impolitic tax. To the tax on horses he gave his hearty affent, as productive of the fum stated.

The Right Hon, Gentleman, by his calculation, had eftimated that 3,000,000 people wear gloves; he should have confidered that there are a number of children, labourers, and inferior classes of people who do not wear them; he thought 9,000,000 pairs therefore rather too high a calculation for the general confumption. After stating these observations, he trusted they would not be confidered as proceeding from any evil intention, or from a defire of giving opposition to the taxes, which he specerely withed might produce the sums for which they were would no Right H that he d quate to men ferv of obtain ploy in w fore, to dignity o prevente port in fi to, were &c. for the e trustevil intaxes, which they were estimated. After making some other remarks in general terms, he expressed his concern that the taxes in question would not produce the fum of 422,000 l. as calculated by the Right Hon. Gentleman. Mr Fox concluded with observing, that he doubted not but the minister would find resources adequate to the exigency of the times.

Lord Surrey expressed his disapprobation of the tax on women fervants, as materially affecting persons whose only hopes of obtaining a little subsistence depended on that kind of employ in which they were now to be taxed. He wished, therefore, to see it altered so as to affect those who; degrading the dignity of man, affumed the offices of women, and thereby prevented the latter from being able to gain a comfortable fupport in fuch lituations. The perfons the noble Lord alluded to, wete men-milliners, men-haberdashers, staymakers, &c. &c. With respect to the tax on post-horses, he also wished that to be amended, by laying a double duty on those who travelled on Sundays: This last day, he observed, ought to be a day of rest and relaxation, but instead thereof, it was made a day of labour.

Mr Druke was also averse to the tax on maid servants, which he considered as very impolitic and oppressive, and contrary to the true maxims of a state.

Mr Hamet thought the tax on females a tax upon the ma-iters, and not upon the fervants: but as a citizen of London, and a friend to trade, he could not help exprelling his very frong objections to the tax on thops, which, he faid, appeared to him to be an addition to the house tax by a pound rate par-tially applied to the trading part of the kingdom, which he thought too much burthened already, and therefore he flould ever oppose it. He approved greatly, however, of abolishing the hawkers and pedlars, and mentioned the distress in particular of the shop-keepers in the vicinity of Tower-Hill and the Minories, who complained of the great inconvenience they suffered from them, which called for immediate redrefs. This measure, therefore, he faid, should have his cordial and hearty support; but he ftill perfifted, that the tax on shops was an encreased house-tax, by a pound rate partially applied.

Mr Drake spoke again, endeavouring to establish the position be had first laid down, of the maid-servants tax being contrary to the true maxims of sound policy.

Sir James Johnstone expressed himself much concerned to find, that the Right Hon. Gentleman had been reduced to the necessary of laying hinds on the semale servants; but as his meatment was fo gentle, he would not object to the meafure.

Mr Rolle wished to know, if the Right Hon. Gentleman intended to make any exceptions to the general tax on fervants? He was of opinion, that taxing those who were employed as husbandmen, was very impolitic. To tax that which may contribute to prevent the further improvement of agriculture, was, in his opinion, highly improper; and he trufted the Right Hon. Gentleman would also see the very great impropriety of taxing parish servants, who were never yet considered as fit objects of taxation.

Mr Dempfter expressed much disapprobation at the tax on female fervants, as also on that respecting hawkers and ped-lars; afferting, that it would be productive of much injury to that description of men.

Mr Frâncis, Sir T. Ridge, and Mr Sheridan, faverally oke on the subject; the two former Gentlemen contended fooke on the subject; the two former condemned the tax in very fevere terms.

Mr Sheridan animadverted in general terms on the state of the finances, and particularly on the nature of the funded and unfunded debt.

Several other members spoke, after which the refolutions were read by the Chairman and agreed to, and ordered to be reported on the morrow.

LONDON.

The Prince of Wales has, by the proper officers, required from Ministers, that they do forthwith render to him an account of the produce and appropriation of the revenues of the principality of Wales, during the minority of his Royal High-

The minister yesterday opened the Budget. The new taxes, added to the Irish business, will render him very unpopular, especially at a time when the public were led to imagine, from the former taxes being fo productive; few or none would be laid on this year. The taxes on maid fervants and shops feem to be mast obnaxious, and it is thought must be altered.

So foon as the Scheldt bufiness between the Emperor and the Dutch is fettled, the election of a King of the Romans will create much agitation on the Continent. A coulin of the Emperor's, fon of the Grand Duke of Tufcany, is the candidate he wishes to have elected : there are at prefent only eight electors, who are faid to be equally divided, four on the fide of the Emperor, and four with the King of Prussia, who has one of the votes as Elector of Brandenburg, and supports another candidate not in the Austrian interest; the first struggle will therefore be, to fill up the vacancy in the ninth electorate; whichever party carries that point, of course gains the election of the King of the Romans. It is supposed this business will not be settled without bloodshed.

Accounts from many of the confiderable towns in America mention, that their specie is almost exhausted, and bills are very ill to be had, and at a high exchange. The province of Maffachusert's Bay have passed an act lately to make English guineas current that want fix grains of the weight, which has produced the effect of clipping them down to that standard. This will effectually prevent the exportation of their remaining gold, and render payment of the debts due to British subjects very tedious and uncertain, who must now wait for produce, instead of bills or cash. Such bills as will be ready by Thursday next, with those already passed both Houses since the last commission, will re-ceive the Royal assent by commission; afterwards the House of Peers will adjourn for the holidays; but the House of Commons are not expected to adjourn till Friday.

The fire which broke out on Saturday morning near the end of Stoney-lane, at Horsley-down, Southwark, will be attended with one of the most heavy losses that has been sustained for many years from a similar calamity. The first buildings that were deftroyed were extensive turpentine, pitch, and tar ware-houses nearly adjoining, together with all their instammable contents to a large amount. The turpentine, pitch, and tar, being melted ran amongst, and being thrown by the engines with the water upon the fire, the flames, instead of being appealed, raged with tenfold fury. Including the tea in two

East India hoys that were burnt, an immente quantity of that article is confumed; the reports on this head are various and contradictory; some say that three, some seven, and others that fifteen thousand chefts of tea were confumed. The fine and very extensive range of warehouses belonging to Mess. Davis's are quite deflroyed, with their contents to a vast amount. The ruins occasioned by this shocking conflagration cover several acres of ground, several hundreds, of edifices, including dwellings, warehouses, stores, and out buildings being destroyed. The loss cannot be ascertained, but the most prevailing opinion is, that it will exceed three hundred thousand pounds,

HOUSE or COMMONS.

"The House went into a Committee, Mr Gilbert in the chair, on the Irish Propositions, when Mr Graham was heard in behalf of the petition from the merchants of Bristol and Glasgow, complaining of the fame; and being ordered to withdraw, Mr Wall, a shoe-manufacturer and trader of the town of Stafford, was called to the bar, and heard against the faid Propositions, setting forth, that in case they should pass into a law. positions, setting forth, that in case they should pass into a law, the Irish would soon be enabled, from their leather being exempt from the Excise laws, to undersell us in that article at foreign markets.

"The Committee being up, and the House refumed, Mr Gilbert reported the several resolutions on the taxes; upon which Mr Fox rose, and complained of them in general; and contended, that they would by no means prove so productive as the minister had pretended, nor seave any such surplus, as he mentioned for the Sinking Find.

"When the House came to the tax on Maid-fervants of two stillings and superce a year, Earl, Surrey rose to oppose the same, and took this early stage of doing it, he said, that the minister might have time to consider it in his mind, and give up a tax that could not but be thought highly obnoxious, as women were surely not so well calculated as men to support

" Mr Pitt defended the tax, in the first place, because the tax would not fall upon the maid-ferrant, but upon the ma-fter and miltrefs; and, in the fecond place, because the tax, he fter and mistres; and, in the second place, because the tax, he was very sure, would prove a very productive one.

"Mr Drake, though he always divided, he said, with the minister, could not agree with him on the present occasion. He thought the tax on maid-servants liable to many objections. It would cause great number of families to discharge, or lessen their servants, who would, in that case, run into idleness; and the transition from that to worse, was easily to be imagined. He, therefore, should be obliged to divide against the tax in its surresstage, if not modified.

"Mr Fox allowed the difficulty there was in raising taxes its future stage, if not modified.

"Mr Fox allowed the difficulty there was in raising taxes to please every one; but thought that no family should pay a tax for maid-servants, where a mide-servant was not kept; and if the Minister did not think proper to agree with that amendment, he would advise him to give up the tax on senselections, and substitute in its stead another tax on backelors.

"Mr Pitt faid, there was certainly fomething in the amendment proposed, and he would most affiredly give it his ferious confideration and attention.

"Mr Jenkinson could not see any hardship the tax would be on maid-servants, as it would fall on the family, and that no family would have to pay more than 30 s. a year for their

"Mr Courtenay opposed the tax in a speech of great wit and humour. He went into a history of maid-fervants both ancient and modern, and, amongst a variety of other witticisms, observed, that as the act did not mention what age the maid was to be at to be taxed, it would be proper for the Secretaries of the Treasury to examine into so nice a point, and report their opinion on it.
" Mr Demofter opposed the tax, and recommended one on watches, and dogs, as preferable to it. "Mr Whithread faid, if the tax on receipts was enforced, it would produce a million more than at prefent; and that, if it was done, there would be no occasion for any tax on female

"Mr Alderman Watfon proposed as a substitute for a tax on maid-servants, a double tax on foreign servants, and hairdreffers.

"Sir Richard Hill, Mr Sheridan, Mr Powys, Mr Crewe, Mr Rolle, also spoke, without being either decidedly for or against it, at least, in its present stage.

"Earl Surrey then divided the House, when there appeared for the tax 97, and against it 24.

"The other resolutions were then severally read, and agreed to, and bills ordered to be brought in accordingly. " The House then went into a Committee on the re-commitment of Lord Makon's county election bill, Sir Watkin Lewes in the chair, which was read clause by clause, and, after several amendments, agreed to.

FOR THE CALEDONIAN MERCURY. Unto their Honoars the MAGISTRATES and Town-Council of Edinburgh, the Petition of LAZARUS LAST Shoemaker, and HABAKUK HEEL-TOP Cobler in Edinburgh, in name of themselves and their respective Grafts;

THAT your petitioners have of late experienced a most alarming and rapid decrease in their respective employments, owing to a decrease in the consumption of shoes. Altogether unable to account for this phenomenon, they consulted a celebrated astrologer, who informed them, that the loss of their employment was owing entirely to—the weather.

For, whereas, in other cities, people only kept within doors, and confequently, did not wear their shoes in rain; the inhabitants of Edinburgh have of late become more anxious to keep at home in fair weather, as they find it infinitely more intolerable to be blinded and suffocated with inteffant whirling clouds of duft, than to be wetted with a flower.

The petitioners are indeed fully fenfible of your Honours goodness to them, and of your encouragement to trade, by suffering Leith Walk to lie unrepaired, to the great consumption and destruction of shoes.—Yet notwithstanding, if your Honours do not fall upon some method of allowing the inhabitants nours do not fall upon some method of allowing the inhabitants to walk abroad in fair weather, your petitioners are afraid that you will have to build a new wing to the Charity Work-Houfe, as an afylum for us, our crafts, and our families.
